Sano Babu Sunuwar and Lakpa Tsheri Sherpa took the title following their Ultimate Descent expedition. The pair proved they have a true spirit of adventure by successfully completing the expedition which involved climbing Everest, paragliding back down and then kayaking all the way to

S the Indian Ocean. With borrowed gear and a bare-bones budget, there were no corporate sponsors nor social media campaigns, just the essentials for adventure – vision, creativity and friendship.

The three-month quest for the Ultimate Descent began in April 2011 and the pair arrived at the summit of Mount Everest (8850m) on May 21. Wasting no time, they then launched a tandem paraglider from the summit, being only the third team to do so. For the men, flying above the Khumba Glacier was the highlight of the expedition. Their 4999-metre descent lasted a remarkable 45 minutes.

The final stage of their expedition was completed on June 27 when the men reached Ganga Sagar in the Bay of Bengal by kayak.

Surfer Carissa Moore has not only proved herself to be a top-class surfer, but she's even managed to break the gender barrier in her sport by competing in men's events. At the age of 18, Moore finished high school like most youngsters her age. However, that was also the year she was accepted onto the Association of Surfing Professionals (ASP) Women's World Tour. She showed fellow competitors and surfing fans what she was made of when she picked up first prize in two events. Moore went on to crush the female competition in world surfing's main events. On the ASP's World Tour, she came first in three events and snatched the overall women's title. The young surfer has also competed against the world's best male surfers on male tour events. In two short years of professional competition, Moore has pocketed a staggering $225,000 and has attracted top-notch sponsors.

The young surfer is now set to compete against the world's best male surfers on the male tour events which will take place on her home turf in Hawaii.

Snowboarder Travis Rice, whose father was a ski patroller, was raised to take risks in snowy mountains. His unique combination of fearlessness, acrobatics and snow and mountain sense have enabled him to reach the peaks of snowboarding. Now hailed as the best snowboarder in the world, Rice received worldwide acclaim following the release of the film The Art of Flight in which he executes astonishing aerial tricks high up in the mountains. In the peaks, a fall could mean tumbling down a vertical face or being swept into a gaping crevasse. Although a lot of planning went into the film, many of the tricks were spontaneous. Rice says, 'You have to see opportunity when it knocks on your door.'
