

The differences between leader and manager: a leader influences the subordinates to achieve a specified goal/objective, whereas a manager is one who manages the employees in the organization.

A leader foresees the future of the organization and strategize goals required for the growth of the organization. The manager uses his intelligence in delegating the tasks to get work done from the employees. A leader has followers while the manager has employees.

A leader sets directions for the organization while the manager plans the details regarding it. A leader focuses on aligning the managers of the firm, while the manager focuses on aligning the tasks of the employees of the firm.

Leaders create change in the organization, while managers find ways to adjust to those changes made. A leader focuses on the growth and the development of the organization while a manager focuses in accomplishing the end results of the organization.
