SELF-STUDY INSTRUCTIONS

Reading for this session on your own, it is important to give attention to the following facts.

- The settlements in Australia and New Zealand occurred two centuries later than that of America.

- Australia was founded as a penal colony. Early Australian population consisted of mainly convicts and came mainly from the south-east of England. That is why they spoke the language which was very close to Cockney (e.g. initial h-dropping).

- The most striking features of Australian English are found in vowel shift and elision.

- There are no regional dialects in New Zealand English with a few exceptions in vocabulary.
